DELIBERATE INDIFFERENCE: A Personal Memoir of School Board Corruption and the Damaging Effects of Teacher Tenure Wyn Dyer

On Thursday, August 15, 2015, CNN reported that the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlanta, Georgia, ruled that administrators at Sparkman Middle School in Madison County, Alabama, had shown "deliberate indifference" towards a student who was used as bait in a sexual harassment scheme. The "sting" operation, orchestrated by school officials, was supposed to catch a student in the act of harassment so that he could be properly disciplined. However, the sting operation went wrong, and the female student was sexually assaulted. Instead of reporting the incident as a sexual crime and giving the student the support she deserved, school officials did very little. Many people who read or heard about this story wondered how this happened. How could school officials choose to protect teachers and principals instead of helping the students?

This book tells an unbelievable story of how a nearby school board protected the teachers and vilified the parents who continued to seek answers about harassment of students and the loss of thousands of dollars in fundraiser money. These parents learned just how far the school board would go to keep the truth hidden and discredit the truth-tellers.
