Not illustrated. 1865 Excerpt: ...the night's" resplendent flower, With tints, like hues of heaven, the eye deceiving,---So, lost in' labyrinthine maze, he wove A wreath of flowers; the golden thread was love. IX. Whence? Whither? Where?--A taper point of light My life and world,--the infinite around-f A sea, not even highest thought can sound; A formless void; unchanging, endless nights In vain the struggling spirit aims its flight To the empyrean, seen as is a star, Sole glimmering through the ha'zy night afar,--In vain it beats its1 wings with daring might. What yonder gleams? What heavenly shapes arise From out the bodiless waste? Behold the dawn, Sent from-on hijrh! Uncounted ages gone, Burst full and glorious on my wondering eyes: Sun-clear the world around, and-far away A boundless future sweeps in golden day. THE CONTRAST. To his gallant horse the warrior sprung,--They calfed, but he would not stay; And the hoof of his hurrying charger rung, As to battle he rushed away. She stood aloft on the warder's tower, And she followed him over the plain, And she watched through many a silent.hour, But she heard not his tramp again. They came, when the morning was cold and pale, With a warrior on his bier, And his banner, rent like a tattered sail, Showed he died not the death of fear. They brought him in pride and sorrow back To the home he iad left so gay, When he gallantly flew on glory's track. And to battle rushed away. BALLAD "Whither away, in thy swift-winged bark, Over the waters blue?" "The way is long, and the night is dark, And before the song of the matin lark My voyage must lie through. "On Clutha's rock a castle tall Frowns over the waters.blue. My lord, within that castle tall,.In deadly peril-holds his all.; And my life to my lord is due. "I have ...
