This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1893. Excerpt: ... fracture of lower extremity of humerus. Admitted to the hospital May 12th. It was impossible to put the arm up in a flexed position on account of a tendency to a backward displacement of the ulna. It was therefore treated in the extended position. On removing the splints two months later it was found that there was considerable anterior displacement of the trochlear surface due to the interposition of callus between the fragments so that it was impossible to flex the arm. Arthrotomy was performed July 20th, when enough of the anterior trochlear surface was removed to permit flexion of the fore-arm. The wound healed by first intention, and passive motion began in four weeks time, resulting in a useful joint. Case X. Removal of Carpal Bones for Necrosis, Following Gunshot Wound of the Wrist.--A. W. W., male, age 30, was shot through the right wrist February 20th, the ball passing from within outwards. When seen on February 29th extensive necrosis of carpal bones had ensued. A single free incision was made over the dorsum of the wrist, extending along the center of the meta-carpal bone of the index finger (Langenbeck's). Through this opening the carpal bones were readily turned out. The bases of the meta-carpal bones, and the lower extremities of the radius and ulna were not excised. The wound healed slowly and passive movements of the fingers were performed at an early period after the operation. He was discharged from the hospital with a good result. Case XI. Operation for Deformity just above the elbow joint.--N. W.; female; age 12. Fell from a chair sustaining a supra-condyloid fracture of left humerus. When she entered the hospital ten months after the accident she was unable to flex the arm beyond a right angle on account of the anterior displacement o...
