If these old walls could talk, would you listen? When a house has a story to tell, historical events to relate and lives to share, it should be given a voice; especially when the house is French and possesses a certain “je ne sais quoi”. “Through These Doors: the Manoir at Bout L’Abbé” tells of the German occupation of Normandy during WWII and the scars left on their unwilling French hosts. A fragile coexistence between the factions struggling for control of Normandy is born, while internal conflicts between certain German officers and their Nazi leaders complicate the impossible relationship between a young French girl and the soldier she finds herself drawn to. It also speaks of Debra, the American woman who convinces her French husband to buy the manor house in the 1980’s. She finds herself listening to whispers of previous occupants and being accused of insanity because of it. Still, the house will not be silent and Debra submits to its dubious support as her stormy relationship unfolds.

Jennifer Valdovinos:

As a scholar exactly feel bored to be able to reading. If their teacher asked them to go to the library or even make summary for some guide, they are complained. Just very little students that has reading's heart and soul or real their interest. They just do what the instructor want, like asked to the library. They go to generally there but nothing reading critically. Any students feel that examining is not important, boring and also can't see colorful photos on there. Yeah, it is to be complicated. Book is very important for yourself. As we know that on this time, many ways to get whatever you want. Likewise word says, many ways to reach Chinese's country. So, this Through These Doors: The Manoir at Bout L'Abbe can make you experience more interested to read.
