The Typesetter's Tray: The Town of Bookville M. A. Hook

Once upon a time in the land of Knowledge, in the state of Logic, in the county of Reason, in the village of Bookville there lived a printer who had a shop in the center of town... Inside the Print Shop was a strange and mysterious place called the Typesetters Tray. All the letters live in the Typesetters Tray along with their friends. The big letters live in rows at the top of the tray and their children live in the rows below them. Their friends, the punctuation marks and symbols live in the lowest rows of all. During the day the residents of the Typesetter's Tray work for the printer and his wife putting the evening paper together, telling all the happenings for that day. In the evening, when the printer and his wife have gone home, all the residents come out to play and discuss the happenings of the day. This is their story.
