"THE EDITOR of this Voyage, which has already past through Three Editions, with the approbation of those who were companions in the expedition, and sharers in the dangers of it, has still the farther satisfaction, on comparing the original journal with that now published by authority, to find the facts and dates, the latitudes and longitudes (those essentials of a Voyage undertaken for Discovery) so exactly to correspond, as could hardly have been expected from journals kept on board the same ship by different observers, who had no communication with each other. No greater proof is therefore necessary to establish its authenticity. This is an edition of a classical book first published in the eighteenth century.
