Havana, 1963:

Rupert Justice Tolliver, a young Texan who boasts that he will one day be president, is being driven through the city when a bullet whizzes past his nose. The shooter, a professional Rhodesian assassin named Cobra, fired because he was ordered to. He missed intentionally, perhaps making the greatest mistake of his life. . . .

Washington, 2001:

After a career as a television preacher and a stint as Governor of Texas, Rupert Justice Tolliver is elected president by a razor-thin margin. Declaring a holy war, he calls the Army and Navy to action, releasing the U.S. military machine on all foes, foreign and domestic, that he considers ungodly. As the world teeters at the brink of the millennium, Tolliver's rule disturbs international financial markets, creating chaos worldwide. This causes wealthy men from all corners of the globe to unite in a conspiracy against the leader of the free world, and they begin the search for an assassin.

Cobra:

Brought out of retirement in the African vineyards, the sharpshooter is offered a handsome sum to do what he should have done so many years ago: shoot to kill. This time around, all should go as planned. Except there's one variable Cobra isn't counting on.

Clarissa:

The beautiful and ruthless First Lady. The real mastermind behind the rising tide of terror, Clarissa isn't above using sex to manipulate the men on both sides of the conflict. And if she has her way, the beginning of the next millennium will be an era of demagoguery, mayhem, and bloodshed.
